Work environment

Parks Canada is a federal government agency responsible for the protection and presentation of Canada's outstanding natural and cultural resources through a system of national parks, national marine conservation areas and national historic sites in all regions of Canada.

Intent of the process

You will work with up to 19 Coast Salish First Nations to build respectful and trusting relationships and to investigate with them the concept of a national marine conservation area reserve in the Southern Strait of Georgia. In this role, you understand what it means to “walk with a foot in both worlds”—working for Parks Canada while building connections and collaborating with First Nations partners. You know how to listen, approach your work with an open heart and mind and you are always looking for creative solutions.

You know how to work with First Nations communities, respecting cultural protocols while understanding Parks Canada's mandate and the importance of First Nations' relationships to Parks Canada. You also have a good understanding of marine ecosystems and pressures on them, particularly in densely populated areas. You are familiar with marine conservation goals and the complex relationship that First Nations have with marine and riparian areas. You also have a solid background in the legal and treaty contexts within which the Southern Strait of Georgia national marine conservation area reserve is proposed. What you do not know, you are willing and eager to learn, and you understand the importance of seeking various viewpoints.

You will be required to negotiate, develop and manage contracts, agreements, protocols and other processes, but you will also spend time in the various First Nations communities, talking with community members, attending community consultation meetings and leading, developing and implementing collaborative projects.

If having a key advisory role and developing co-operative relationships with First Nations appeals to you, then you are invited to apply to the following employment opportunity.
